

You are Not Alone

“Anything is possible
when you have the right people there to support you”

Intro

Finding out your child has an additional need can be overwhelming, filling you with many thoughts, feelings and questions.

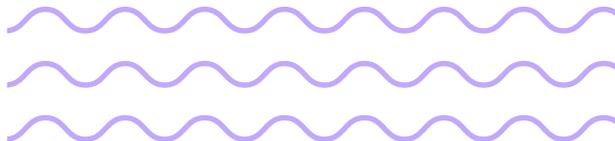

Waltham Forest Parent Forum is a parent carer forum, run by parents and carers of children and young people with special educational needs and/or disabilities (SEND). We wanted to help remove the isolation and barriers you may be facing.

We have put this booklet together for parents to pass on their supportive, positive parenting comments and top tips and for them to show that you are not alone,

We hope the support of their words can bring you knowledge, confidence and courage on your journey as a family. You are a great parent and you will be an amazing advocate for your child.

We are all there for you.

Anything is possible when you have the right people there to support you.

SAYINGS

Everyone is different, but everyone is special

Listen to your child

The diagnosis is not the end, as it may seem. You have lived with this so far and you will only continue to grow and help your child be the best they can be!!

You are doing a great job; we all get overwhelmed

Take every day as it comes. No two days are the same.

Your child's SEND does not define who they are, but makes them exceptional

Welcome to the wonderfully special club that no-one asks to be in

Trust yourself

Your child's silence is your invitation to be their voice. Be the best one you can be.

Embrace uniqueness and let the extra sparkle shine through

TIPS

Your child will help you appreciate the small wins in life! You'll learn to live in the moment and relish celebrations, big and small. You may feel tired, you may feel angry, you may even feel like you can't do this anymore. All these feelings are valid. Don't let anyone, not even your own conscience, tell you otherwise. We all feel this way every now and then and why wouldn't we? We've been chosen on this special journey, where everything requires extra effort. So, whenever you feel you're running out of fuel, do what you need to do to recharge yourself. If it means letting your child have longer screen time than usual, then let them. For you can only give your child your best when you feel your best! You got this! All my love...

Always do your own research and question everything you are not sure about.

A few years ago, I went to an Autism workshop. The speaker was a gentleman who wore a snazzy holiday print shirt and said that he was also autistic. He mentioned something so memorable that I have treasured to this day. He said: "Do not introduce your child to others with their deficit." He said if someone were to introduce me to someone else, I would like them to say, "Hey this is Dave... (for example) he's my friend who wears nice shirts." The idea is that you wouldn't introduce anyone with their shortcomings and disability at first. Their disability doesn't define who they are.

Pick your battles (especially with your child).

▶ Child with lots of appointments in lots of places? Get a huge lever arch folder and store medical reports, letters, etc as soon as they come in. And then take it to every appointment. Digital versions work well too, but remember medical settings rarely have accessible Wi-Fi and you might need a report in a hurry.

▶ The help and support you find from other parents is invaluable and priceless, don't be afraid to reach out.

▶ Accept support. It took me a long time to realise this. Accepting help is not failing, it's recognising that I am not alone.

▶ Gather a support network around yourself, family members, friends or a local support group. They will be invaluable if things get tough.

▶ It can feel like sometimes there's just too much to learn or understand straight after the diagnosis. Don't try to do everything at once. Focus on small things, one step at a time.

▶ Ask which groups/workshops you can attend and go to at least 2 soon after diagnosis. They will allow you some time to talk with other parents, listen to experts and start coming to terms with the diagnosis, which may have come as a massive shock to you. It'll be emotional but it can be a really isolating time and you need to know that you're not alone with your experiences.

Be persistent with schools, healthcare providers, etc. I have made the mistake of not following up on stuff quickly and time certainly slips away if you don't keep your eye on things!

Self-care is paramount. Take regular time to look after yourself physically and mentally, even if it's just for a short time every day. I attended Sarah Fisher's NVR course in January 2019 and, after some general introduction to NVR, she dived straight into self-care. It had a massive impact on me - at the time I was really struggling (classic post-Christmas holidays exhaustion!) and Sarah's emphasis on self-care prompted me to face up to my mental health issues and to seek help. It was a real turning point for me, as taking regular time for myself to have therapy, or do a hobby, or do exercise, or sit and watch Midsomer Murders, no longer feels selfish - those things make me a better parent because I'm more relaxed and find it easier to keep things in perspective. Most of the time...

Remember that some things are under our control, whereas others are not. I read a bit of Stoic philosophy these days. It wouldn't appeal to some, but this is a key Stoic theme, and it really helps me to manage my expectations of myself, others and the world in general.

Join as many groups as possible for advice, and remember, knowledge is your ultimate power.

Look after yourself as well as your child.

Join Waltham Forest Parent Forum (WFPPF)! It's excellent! Lots of help, support and a listening ear!

LOCAL SUPPORT

Life with a disabled child brings unique challenges, which is why it is important to find support. There are many organisations and websites, locally and nationally, which can offer support.

LOCAL OFFER

The Local Authority must have a website dedicated to special educational needs, which includes everything that is available in the area to support families of children with SEND.

www.walthamforest.gov.uk/service-categories/local-offer

SENDIASS: Special Educational Needs and Disability Information, Advice and Support Service

All local authorities must fund an information and advice service to offer support about education, health and social care issues to young people and parents. The provider of the service may change as contracts are renewed so it is always best to check on the local authority's website for further details.

CARERS FIRST WALTHAM FOREST

Carers FIRST is a not-for-profit organisation supporting people who look after a relative or friend who - due to ill health, physical or mental illness, disability, frailty, or addiction - cannot manage without their support. They provide information, advice, guidance, emotional support, training and activities, giving carers an opportunity to have a break from their caring role and help them to get the support they need.

SENDSUCCESS

SENDSuccess is the name used by Whitefield School's Outreach Service and Joseph Clarke School's Educational Service in Waltham Forest.

They support mainstream schools looking to help their pupils who have sensory impairment, autism, learning and cognitive disabilities. The team is made up of an experienced team of teachers with specialist qualifications in visual impairment, teachers of the deaf, SEN outreach teachers and an audiology technician. They also have an ICT specialist and mobility officer.

Parents can self-refer to the service.

CAMHS

The Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service (CAMHS) is the specialist mental health team providing support to children, young people and their families. The service is available to families with children & young people from birth to their 18th birthday. The service offers help to children and young people who are experiencing emotional, behavioural or mental health difficulties.

For those over 18, there is an adult CAMHS service.

HENRY

The Henry service is the current provider that supports families with children aged 0-5 to provide the best and healthiest start in life for their children.

Their family services cover four key themes:

- Infant feeding – breast, bottle or mixed
- Healthy eating
- Oral health
- Speech & language

As the service provider may change when contracts are renewed, please check availability with your local Children and Family Centre.

CHILDREN AND FAMILY CENTRES

Children and Family Centres offer services where you can enjoy activities and receive any needed support for families with children. Skilled and experienced staff will be able to provide you with information and advice on child development, child and family health, parenting skills and family support. In Waltham Forest we have four Children and Family Centre Hubs working in family partnership with:

- Waltham Forest Early Help Team - one to one family support and Parenting Programmes
- Health Visiting Service (NELFT)
- The Lloyd Park Children's Charity
- HENRY (Health, Exercise Nutrition for the Really Young)
